Colonel J. H. Holman, an ex-federal soldier, of Knoxville, Tennessee, has placed the Appeal and its efficient business manager, Mr. Locke, under lasting obligations. Mr. Locke, like the gallant colonel, was a fighting soldier during the late war, but unlike the colonel, lost his right arm in battle. Mr. Locke finds the loss of his dexter breadwinner no trivial matter, especially when two busy fingers are required to discharge the duties of his office. Colonel Holman, appreciating the situation and sympathizing with a brother soldier, though on the Confederate side, caused admirable marble paper-weights to be made and presented to Mr. Locke.
